Dear Mr. Forbes:

Re: Retirement Income System – Federal Consultations

Advocis is pleased to provide its comments on improving Canada's retirement income system and retirement income adequacy for Canadians.

Advocis, The Financial Advisors Association of Canada, is Canada's oldest and largest voluntary professional membership association of financial advisors and planners. We represent life and health insurance licensees and mutual fund and securities registrants across the country. Advocis members pride themselves on the service and advice delivered to individuals and the business community, particularly small-and medium-sized companies through the provision of professional financial advice and insurance and financial service products. This includes group RRSPs, deferred profit sharing plans and defined contribution ("DC") plans (hereinafter referred to collectively as "Capital Accumulation Plans or "CAP Plans") and defined benefit ("DB") plans.

Advocis has established a Retirement Income Adequacy Committee whose mandate is to identify retirement and pension issues that are of concern to Canadians and to promote a sound retirement income system in Canada including reforms to improve retirement income adequacy for Canadians now and in the future.

Pension coverage, retirement income adequacy and the necessary reforms are major public policy issues. We commend the Federal Government for making Canada's retirement income system a policy priority. While the Canadian retirement income system may compare favourably to others from an international perspective, reforms should be implemented to improve pension coverage and retirement income adequacy so that more Canadians can retire with adequate retirement income now and in the future.

Retirement planning is a priority for most Canadians and our over 11,000 members work with individuals, families and businesses to reach their financial goals. Our members provide comprehensive financial advice to Canadians through all stages of their lives including estate and retirement planning, wealth management, risk management, tax planning, employee benefits, critical illness and disability insurance. Our members provide retirement planning and investment advice to employees with CAP Plans, RRSPs and TFSA's and establish and administer CAP Plans and DB plans for small and medium sized businesses.

General Comments

Advocis would like to stress that a broad focus encompassing all types of retirement savings is required. Advocis has examined existing barriers to establishing and maintaining pension plans and incentives to encourage small and medium sized employers to participate in pension plans. We have looked at the important aspects of the retirement income system in Canada and we wish to offer some practical solutions for improvement. Last September Advocis commissioned a study entitled "Encouraging Small and Medium Sized Firms to Participate in Pension Plans"<sup>1</sup>.

The study confirms that:

- a. The number of Canadian employees who are participating in any form of employer sponsored pension plan has been declining;
- b. Only one-third (35%) of Canadian employees have an employer-sponsored pension plan, with coverage being only 24% in the private sector; and
- c. Only one-third of Canadians will have adequate income at retirement.

The study examined barriers to establishing and maintaining pension plans and incentives to encourage employers to participate in pension plans. The report makes practical recommendations to support the establishment of more pension plans and increased retirement incomes for Canadians.

The study concluded that the most appropriate type of employer sponsored pension plan is a defined contribution plan, especially for small and medium sized business enterprises. Public policy should focus on how to improve the regulatory environment for such plans. Indeed, Advocis believes that public policy should reinforce the strong financial attributes of all CAP Plans.

Advocis has a number of recommendations (set out below) to reform the pension and retirement income system.

Advocis strongly believes that professional financial advice is needed by the majority of Canadians in order to lead to good consumer financial outcomes, not only in the areas of retirement income savings, but in a whole host of other areas as well such as planning for a child's education and long-term health care needs. Public policy should foster an expansive role for professional financial advice in order to ensure that Canadians can meet their retirement income and other financial goals. Canadians should not be expected to serve as their own financial experts but should have access to professional financial advice so that they have safe and adequate retirement savings.

Comment on the Principles Identified in the Consultation Paper

Advocis agrees with the principles identified in the Consultation Paper when considering improvements to Canada's retirement income system:

- The system should remain affordable for individuals and businesses;
- Costs incurred by governments should be appropriate and affordable, as well as sustainable over the long-term;
- The system should function so that it does not transfer costs from one generation to another;
- There should continue to be an appropriate balance maintained between individual and government responsibility for retirement savings, and an appropriate level of individual choice; and
- The system should remain accessible to all Canadians.

Advocis would like to stress that what is required is the strengthening of existing means through needed reforms. This would include, but is not limited to, a combination of higher and more flexible tax assisted contribution limits, longer accumulation phases past age 71, deferred and reduced requirements for income commencement and substantially more "user friendly" rules for employer sponsors which will improve the system.

Advocis supports a national approach to reforms to the third pillar of the retirement income system as this will allow all Canadians to have the same opportunities to save and invest and be adequately prepared for their retirement. A national approach involving both the federal and provincial governments in harmonizing efforts would also likely lessen regulatory compliance costs and burdens for participants who operate in more than one province. Advocis urges governments to give serious consideration to harmonizing regulations, particularly with respect to locking-in rules, between provinces and federally to reduce complexities and costs for employers and employees.

Advocis believes that it is important to increase pension or retirement savings coverage among private sector workers and that this should be a principle adopted by the Federal Government. Employers and employees should be encouraged to participate in retirement savings plans and barriers should be removed and incentives put in place which will facilitate employers offering retirement savings plans for their employees and result in more employees being members of a plan.

Solutions should target those at risk of not being able to meet their non-discretionary expenses in retirement. To achieve a standard of living that is similar to that enjoyed during pre-retirement, the measurement of replacement rate of income is generally utilized. It should be stressed that the correct replacement rate is not a one-size fits all answer and depends on what the individual's standard of living was pre-retirement, and what a person's goals, expectations and plans are for their retirement years.

Policy should also recognize that people may choose to retire "early" or may choose to continue to work beyond the traditional retirement age of 65.

Advocis will provide comments on the following questions in the consultation document: 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 8.

Advocis' Response to the Questions in Consultation Document

1. What are the main issues/challenges that Canadians face in saving for retirement?

Canadians have many tools to help save for retirement (RSPs, TFSAs, DC Plans sponsored by their employer). One issue for many Canadians is affordability. Another issue is providing the right incentives so that Canadians will be more inclined to save now for their retirement years. For example, the government should consider mandatory enrollment in employer sponsored CAP Plans, subject to the right of the employee to opt out.

Many Canadian employees do not have an employer sponsored pension plan or CAP Plan and therefore, have less choice and fewer options available to them with respect to retirement savings.

2. What is the appropriate role of governments in supporting Canadians to achieve adequate retirement income?

Governments should reduce barriers and provide incentives so that more Canadian will save for their retirement through private sector employer sponsored CAP plans.

3. Does the retirement income system currently have the appropriate mix of public and private support?

Advocis believes that the current apportionment of the three pillars is the appropriate balance (with the modifications to OAS and GIS listed below), so long as reforms are made to the third pillar to encourage greater participation in private sector pension plans, including CAP Plans.

Advocis recommends the following changes to the OAS and GIS:

- Guaranteed Income Supplement (GIS) recipients should be permitted to claim non-refundable tax credits that eliminate the personal income tax that they would otherwise pay. This would reduce their effective marginal tax rate to 50% - the basic GIS claw-back and would resolve the serious disincentive to saving through RRSPs or CAP Plans that currently exists given the high post-retirement effective marginal tax rates.
- The Old Age Security (OAS) claw-back of 15% should be reduced to 10.5 percent, if not abolished. The OAS claw-back creates a dramatic ballooning of marginal and effective tax rates post-retirement. The OAS claw-back is a major deterrent for middle income working Canadians to continue to contribute to society through their work after age 65 and has an adverse incentive effect for retirement savings for some individuals.

4. Are changes needed to further strengthen Canada's retirement income system?

Advocis believes that the Federal Government should give serious consideration to implementing private sector pension and retirement income reforms so that pension coverage and retirement income adequacy can be improved.

The modernization of pension standards legislation to reduce complexities and costs to employers and harmonization of the legislation between provinces, will encourage more employers to offer a pension plan to their employees.

Reducing barriers will increase pension coverage but incentives to encourage employers to offer these plans are also required. Otherwise, pension coverage will not be increased as much as it otherwise could be. Governments should explore tax incentives to encourage small and medium sized businesses to offer pension plans to their employees.

Employers who are well-versed on the issues associated with retirement planning tend to be more interested and we would suggest more inclined to offer benefits to employees.

Advocis strongly believes that tax reforms should be implemented to promote pension coverage. Through tax reforms DC plans can be placed on a more equitable footing with DB plans. There are also reforms to RRSPs that can be made to improve that form of retirement savings. Our recommendations are:

- a) Contribution limits for CAP Plans and RRSPs should be increased to help participants in CAP Plans and RRSPs achieve retirement incomes comparable to participants in public sector DB plans. As a first step, contribution limits should be increased to 20% of earned income and the maximum dollar limits should continue to be indexed. Further increases in these limits should be a priority for future fiscal policy.
- b) The current two year 100% vesting rule should be replaced by gradual vesting over a 3-year period from the date of plan enrolment, with 1/3 at the end of the first year, 2/3 at the end of the second year and full vesting at the end of the third year (the employees contributions are, of course, fully vested from the beginning). This would provide employers with a greater incentive to establish a pension plan. The employee would also have a greater incentive to remain with the company over a longer period, while at the same time, providing some compensation to employees who leave the company before the three-year period. With this approach, employees always receive their money plus a share of the employer's money at termination of employment. Non-vested forfeitures should only be used to offset an employer's current service contributions.
- c) While it is recognized that the tax assisted private retirement planning system in Canada results in significant deferrals, ultimately the tax will be paid. Accordingly, administration rule amendments such as: a reduction or change in minimum withdrawal rates; a longer window for deferral, i.e. to age 75 and the ability to defer tax for prescribed pension amounts while still actively employed (ie voluntary private and public pension rollovers) would create larger pools of capital for the individual to supplement their retirement income at a later date, and for governments to ultimately tax.
- d) Contributions to retirement savings plans should be determined on a life-time average basis in order to not penalize those individuals with fluctuating incomes and individuals whose income increases rapidly later in their working lives. This would allow any earned income in excess of the contribution limit in a year to be carried back or forward to create additional contribution room for years where earned income was below the limit. Any taxable withdrawals from an RRSP or CAP Plan in a year would create future RRSP contribution room. This would allow individuals with career interruptions to make up for years with little or no income by permitting extra contributions in subsequent years of high earnings.

For DC plans, employees and employers should be allowed to make past service contributions based on prior year's earnings up to the limit of the individual's unused RRSP contribution room.

This would also allow individuals to draw down their pension savings to finance other needs (as is currently allowed with RRSPs) without permanently impairing their ability to save for retirement.

- e) The age limit for contributions to retirement savings plans should be increased from age 71 to 75, implemented over a 4-year phase in period given the fact that people are living longer and continuing to work post-retirement.
- f) The required withdrawal of amounts upon retirement from locked-in retirement accounts should be lowered to reflect the fact that interest rates are low, Canadians are continuing to work post-retirement and are living longer.

5. Should there be more mandatory retirement savings?

Advocis strongly believes that Canadians should have the choice of how they accumulate savings for their retirement and that government should not implement reforms that substantially alter the balance between the current three pillars of the retirement income system and would mandate how Canadians save.

Advocis does not, at this time, support expansion of the CPP as a way to improve retirement income adequacy for future Canadian retirees.

Advocis urges the government to allow private sector pension reforms to be implemented and given a chance to succeed prior to giving serious consideration to changes to Pillar 2 (CPP) of the retirement income system.

In addition, the Federal Government and many provinces' deficit situations and the existing tax burden for employees and employers does not support the imposition of an additional tax burden on employers or employees that would be required to expand the CPP.

6. Should individuals be auto-enrolled in any new voluntary savings program?

Advocis believes that governments should implement reforms to the existing private sector pension and retirement savings system (Pillar 3) before implementing any new retirement savings structure. Such reforms could include allowing employers to auto-enroll employees in a CAP Plan, with the ability of the employee to opt out, should they choose to do so.

Advocis is not in favour of a government legislated supplemental pension plan as described in the consultation paper that does not allow for a level playing field with the private sector and that may crowd out existing retirement savings options for consumers and employees.

The costs to set up and run the plan will be significant for taxpayers, including those who do not wish to participate in such a plan. Such costs should not be incurred at this time before allowing reforms to the existing system to be implemented.

8. Should there be more flexibility and choice with respect to private savings options?

Advocis believes that the reforms we are suggesting will provide Canadians with flexibility and choice with respect to private savings options as more employers will offer their employees the ability to save through a pension plan (including a CAP Plan).

Advocis strongly supports reforms to the regime for CAP Plans, as these plans are the best type of pension plan for small and medium sized enterprises. There has been an increase in the percentage of DC Plans and other CAP plans and most of the substantial loss of membership in DB Plans has occurred because of plan conversions<sup>2</sup>.

We also support tax reforms to RRSPs for those Canadians who utilize this form of retirement savings, as set out above, along with the above-noted reforms to OAS and GIS.

We appreciate the opportunity to provide our comments to the government as it considers reforms to the retirement income system.

Yours sincerely,
